

I agreed with the idea of grass at either side of the path at the entrance to the church. Maybe some planters and flowers would brighten up the front. Possibly a different coloured paint on the door if that would be an option.

I did like the idea of a glass door if the hall was opened up, but more plans would be useful before I could give my opinion.

Here's the link to the stained glass Dunfermline Abbey piece I like. The colours are beautiful. I see now that it is a historical piece but I like the theme of nature and colours in this piece.

I was thinking after I left that having space to accommodate mobility scooters would be useful. Having seating in the church that wouldn't set you apart if you did have a wheelchair or for young babies and parents, buggies.

I know that Margaret Simpson in the Social enterprise chamber often does accessibility audits. Our local access panel might be able to help.

Having a fresh lick of paint would help throughout the main body of the church. Having modern colours colours could make the ceiling in the hall brighter too.

From our discussions the cost in upkeep of stain glass windows can be expensive. I did like the idea of letting more light in if possible.

I love real wood but agree that dark wood and mixes of wood can be distracting to the eye.

Being able to have less going on at the organ area would be nice.

I agree that having storage and maybe more potential for outdoor seating in the summer would be nice.

I think that was all I had to raise apart from looking at potential heating sources.
